HYDE TAVERN.

the 14th Connecticut, being detached from my regiment in charge of a Private Guard detailed from it, I remain till to-morrow to follow with the Provost Marshal and pick up stragglers. No I have had an opportunity to see the whole movement to-day.

Among the regiments which passed was the 20th Connecticut, with its full rank, beautiful banners (the 600 State flag presented by the Governor being much admired) and handsome field and staff officers. Col. Ross is said to be a man and as strict a soldier as ever; Lieut. Col. Water and Maj. Buckingham maintain their virility and good looks; and Adj. Charley Ayres, (whom I met for the first time since leaving Conn.) gave me a hearty shake of the hand, and returned me back to Old Norwich. I gave him a Bellows, which he said was just what he wanted. Lieut. Kane to whose brigade they are attached. He is a brother of the distinguished Dr. Kane, was Lieut. Col. of the Pennsylvania Socktans, wounded and taken prisoner at Gross Keys, afterwards paroled, exchanged and made a Brigadier. He has a look of "terrible earnestness." We will hear more from this man.

Attention, Couch now commanding Sumner's corps rode by, laughing and joking, but said you do not know what he is about. Soon after came our own Fourteenth, with their splendid brass band. But with the swelled ranks and full knapsacks and happy faces with which they marched through Hartford one day last August. But with thinned ranks, sooty clothing and shot-riddled coats, and stern, sad but determined faces, and a strong, steady step, Antietam Creek can explain the difference. Can the graves of Hiss, Willard, Crosby, and many more in the quiet soil of your State. The 14th do not murmur at that, but have had some ground to complain of the fact that all that all their baggage was left at Washington and that though they have had little here five weeks, they have not received it. A portion of it has just arrived here and the rest is expected to-morrow, so if the regiment does not push ahead too fast, it can be got to it.

I have just been enjoying Harper's Fort by moonlight, have gazed at the view which the good Jefferson pronounced "Worth a trip across the Atlantic." (Jefferson's Rock is famous here, so they say) have meditated in "John Brown's Engine House," where a Union provost guard guards rebel prisoners. Oh John Brown, John Brown truly our Norwich post expressed it when he said that in hanging you, they were saving the rights and souls of a nation, spring up, and give ye generous sentiments over all the free South. You are avenged!

Over the ruins of the once magnificent arsenal sad thoughts came over me that treason should have caused all this, but gratitude to the United States officers who by fire prevented our important possession from falling into the traitors hands. The Potomac and Shenandoah gladden in the absence of the men, and their gradually rising waters are hailed as a better provocation against Stuart's raids than musketry or the grand Army.

Over the rivers Lower Maryland and Loudon Heights, and again we mourn that treason—at home this time—should have caused the destruction of these almost impregnable heights. Returning to our own headquarters, I find that some of our brave prisoners in the room here are anxious to take the oath of allegiance, and all are well satisfied with their treatment as prisoners.

The guard quietly patrol the halls and a comfortable fire burns in our stables. We have very nice quarters here, but the Army is moving and to-morrow we shall join our regiment. Several officers of the 14th are very sick, but have or are about to resign in consequence of their health, as it is almost impossible to get a horse here. We have just heard of the death of Second Lieut. Crosby of Lieut. Colt's company, whose wounds received at Antietam. He was a Christian soldier and brave to weakness. Friends and comrades. Your memory will be cherished in our hearts while the memory of this successful rebellion lasts.

But we must prepare to move to-morrow, "On to Richmond" this time. Dare we hope it? Yours ever, J. H. OSBORN

The burning of the Allegan River (U. S. Steamboat Company) at Cambridge Mass., Oct. 1862. 27 11

In haste, I give you an account of the burning of the ship Allegan, (170 tons), Capt. Joseph G. Burrows, of New York, from Baltimore, bound to London, with a cargo of guano. At 1:30 a. m. on the morning of the 29th a light was reported from the ship, and proceeded to be a vessel on fire, about fifteen or twenty miles distant. We immediately got under weigh and steamed toward it. It proved to be the above named vessel on fire. Her cargo was already gone (the fire having been set by her crew) and the ship burning furiously. Striving to her bow we found a number of men who seemed to make all speed. We sent four boats to her aid, who brought off the men with their baggage and sundry other articles, from a shipboard, Capt. R.'s I learned the following story:—
